PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE COURT OF APPEALS OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

Petitioner prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York, entered in the above entitled case on April 26, 1957.

Citations to Opinions Below.

The opinion of the Special Term of the Supreme Court of the State of New York, County of New York, is unreported and is printed in Appendix B hereto, p. 25. The opinion of the Court of Appeals of the State of New York dismissing an appeal taken directly to such Court as a matter of right on an alleged constitutional question, printed in Appendix B hereto, p. 27, is reported at 1 N. Y. (2d) 873, and the dissenting opinion of Judge Van Voorhis and Judge Froessel, printed in Appendix B hereto, pp. 27-28, is reported at 1 N. Y. (2d) 874. The subsequent opinion of the Court of Appeals affirming the judgment below, printed in Appendix B hereto, pp. 29-33, is reported at 2 N. Y. (2d) 612. The dissenting opinion of Judge Froessel and Judge Van Voorhis, printed in Appendix B hereto at pp. 33-34, is reported at 2 N. Y. (2d) 615. The judgment and the order below are printed in Appendix B hereto at pp. 35-37.

Jurisdiction

The judgment of the Court of Appeals was entered on April 26, 1957, pp. 35-36, infra. The Jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C., Section 1257(3).

Statement of the Case and How Federal Question Was Presented

This is an action brought in the Supreme Court of the State of New York to enforce a money judgment of the County Court of Windsor County of the State of Vermont (R. 9-10). The complaint did not disclose the nature of the action upon which the Vermont Judgment was recovered. The answer alleged that the defendant was at all times alleged in the complaint a resident of the State of New York, and at no time was a resident of the State of Vermont (R. 10); that the action in Vermont was an action for alienation of affections of plaintiff's husband and for criminal conversation (R. 11); that many of the acts alleged therein occurred in the State of New York; that depositions taken by the plaintiff in such action were taken in the State of New York, and that the judgment sued upon was rendered in such action (R. 11). The answer then set forth the provisions of Section 61-a to 61-i of the New York Civil Practice Act, adopted in 1935 and amended in 1939, which is a declaration of public policy of the State of New York abolishing the remedies theretofore provided by law for the enforcement of actions based upon alleged alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction, and breach of promise to marry (R. 11-15). The answer then alleged that by reason of such statutory provisions, the alleged cause of action upon which the judgment was recovered is one against the public policy of the State of New York and cannot and should not be enforced by the courts of the State of New York, and the courts of the State of New York cannot and should not take jurisdiction of this action (R. 15).

The plaintiff moved to strike out the answer and for judgment on the pleadings on the ground that the answer and the defense therein were insufficient in law since the full faith and credit clause of the Constitution required New York to enforce the Vermont judgment (R. 6-7).

In granting such motion, the Special Term said;

> "Although the judgment of Vermont sued on here is based on a cause of action which is prohibited as against public policy in this state (see sec. 61, C.P.A.) and the defense raises that objection, nevertheless the judgment is entitled to full faith and credit in this state (see Williams v. North Carolina, 317 U. S. 287, at p. 294). New York cannot re-try the case, or review, as in appeal, the judgment of the Vermont Court." (R. 16)

Relying solely on the constitutional question of the applicability of the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution (which was the sole question presented at the Special Term, and upon which the order appealed from was made), the defendant appealed directly to the Court of Appeals pursuant to the provisions of subdivision 4 of Section 588 of the Civil Practice Act (R. 1), whereupon the plaintiff moved to dismiss the appeal on the ground that questions other than the constitutionality of a statute were involved (R. 2). The Court of Appeals granted such motion and dismissed the appeal upon that ground (308 N. Y. 746) (R. 17). An appeal was then taken to the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, under subdivision 5(e) of Section 592 of the Civil Practice Act (R. 4). The Appellate Division, without opinion, unanimously affirmed the judgment of the Special Term (R. 25), (1 App. Div. 2d 659, 147 N. Y. S. 2d 681). (See Appendix B hereto, p. 26.)

Since the decision of the Special Term had been based solely upon the constitutional question, and since that decision had been affirmed by the Appellate Division without opinion, an appeal was then taken to the Court of Appeals under subdivision (1) of Section 588 of the Civil Practice Act (R. 23-24). After argument, the Court of Appeals dismissed the appeal on the ground that defendant was not properly in that court as a matter of right, since the decision below might have been on the basis of a question other than the constitutional one. The Court specifically said that it was not passing upon any other point (R. 85). The opinion of the Court of Appeals dismissing this appeal is reported at 1 N. Y. 2d 873, and is printed in Appendix B hereto, p. 27.

In his opinion dissenting from the dismissal of the appeal by the Court of Appeals (reported at 1 N. Y. (2d) 874 and printed in Appendix B hereto, at pp. 27-28), Judge Van Voorhis, with Judge Froessel concurring, said:

> "This is an action based on a judgment obtained in another State for alienation of the affections of plaintiff's husband. Defendant appeals from a judgment on the pleadings. The answer, which has been stricken as insufficient in law, alleges that many of the acts alleged in the complaint in the other State are pleaded as having occurred in New York State. Sections 61-a to 61-i of our Civil Practice Act are cited, outlawing causes of action for alienation of affections as contrary to our public policy. In particular, section 61-d is relied upon stating that 'No act hereafter done within this state shall operate to give rise, either within or without this state, to any of the rights of action abolished by this article.'

"The only situations in which this section could be applied would be similar to this case, where an attempt is made to enforce a judgment obtained in another State by reasons of transactions of this nature occurring in this State. The order appealed from, in effect, holds this section of the Civil Practice Act to be unconstitutional as violating the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution. The constitutionality of Section 61-d of the New York State Civil Practice Act is, of course, presumed. Borden's Farm Products Co. v. Baldwin, 293 U. S. 194. This is not the case of a judgment of another State altering or adjudicating a question of marital status. Thorp v. Thorp, 90 N. Y. 602; Fisher v. Fisher, 250 N. Y. 313. It is a personal judgment for the recovery of a sum of money by one individual against another, based mainly upon transactions occurring in New York State and rendered contrary to the established public policy of New York State. Under such circumstances, the full faith and credit clause is not an inexorable or unqualified command. Pink v. A.A.A. Highway Express, 314 U. S. 201. In our view, we are not required to give effect to this judgment of the Vermont court, Alaska Packers Assn. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 294 U. S. 532; State of Wisconsin v. Pelican Ins. Co., 127 U. S. 265; Mertz v. Mertz, 271 N. Y. 466; Hon. Robert H. Jackson, Cardozo Lecture, 45 Col. L. Rev., Jan., 1945, pp. 1-34."

Thereafter leave to appeal to the Court of Appeals was sought from the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, First Department, and such leave was denied (R. 27). Subsequently defendant renewed the application for leave to appeal in the Court of Appeals, and the Court of Appeals granted such leave (R. 28, 2 N. Y. 2d 707).

After argument in the Court of Appeals, the judgment of the Appellate Division and of the Special Term was affirmed by a divided court. The opinion of the majority is reported at 2 N. Y. 2d 612, and is printed in Appendix B hereto at pp. 29-33. The dissenting opinion of Judge Froessel and Judge Van Voorhis is likewise reported at 2 N. Y. 2d 612, and is printed in Appendix B hereto at pp. 33-34.

The majority of the court based their decision upon a Federal ground and upon a non-Federal ground. They held that they could not find any language in the statute abolishing an action on a judgment rendered in a sister state, and that they read the statute as abolishing only the causes of action for alleged alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction, and breach of contract to marry. They indicated that they based this reading of the statute upon the mistaken belief that any other reading would have run the risk of unconstitutionality under the full faith and credit clause of the Constitution.

The majority then proceeded to dispose of the constitutional question as follows:

> "Had the legislature attempted to abolish actions for enforcement of judgments rendered by courts of competent jurisdiction in sister states, it would have incurred the risk of unconstitutionality. (U. S. Const., Art. IV, sec. 1). The Supreme Court of the United States has from the beginning consistently seen to it that 'A judgment of a state court should have the same credit, validity and effect in every other court in the United States which it had in the state where it was pronounced' (Hampton v. M'Connell, 3 Wh. 234), which principle is recognized in the Federal Statutes (R.S. #905, 28 U.S.C. #687) and has been reiterated in Fauntleroy v. Lum (210 U. S. 230, 237); Morris v. Jones (329 U. S. 545) and followed in numerous cases (cf. Sherrer v. Sherrer, 334 U. S. 343; Milwaukee County v. White, 296 U. S. 268).

"Because there is a full faith and credit clause, defendant may not a second time challenge the validity of plaintiff's right which has ripened into a judgment (Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Hunt, 320 U. S. 430), which is to say that a judgment of a court having jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject matter operates as res judicata in the absence of fraud or collusion, even if obtained upon default (Riechle v. Margolies, 279 U. S. 218, 225). 'Such a judgment obtained in a sister state is, with exceptions not relevant here (cf. Williams v. North Carolina, 317 U. S. 287), entitled to full faith and credit in another state thereof, although the underlying claim would not be enforceable in the state of the forum' (Morris v. Jones, supra; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290; Fauntleroy v. Lum, supra; Roche v. MacDonald, supra; Titus v. Wallick, 306 U. S. 282."

In their dissenting opinion, (printed in Appendix B hereto, pp. 33-34), Judges Froessel and Van Voorhis disagreed with the majority on both counts.

In the view of the dissenting judges, the statute did extend to bar enforcement of the judgment sued on, and the holding of the majority was contrary to the express purpose of the statute. They said:

"As we read this section, and in the light of the legislative declaration of the public policy of this State in section 61-a of the Civil Practice Act, its provisions may bar enforcement of the judgment sued on if based on acts occurring within this State, and that can only be determined at a trial. Indeed, section 61-d could have no other meaning, for, as pointed out in Judge Van Voorhis' dissenting memorandum on the dismissal of a previous appeal in this case 1 N. Y. 2d 874), the 'only situations in which this section could be applied would be similar to this case. * * *' To hold that the statute does not apply to an action for the enforcement of a foreign judgment is to read it contrary to its express purpose."

Concerning the constitutional question, the dissenting judges said:

"As to the impact of the full faith and credit clause, we have already indicated in the dissenting memorandum hereinabove referred to that it is our opinion, in the light of the clear and strong expression of public policy hereinbefore referred to, that we are not required to enforce this judgment if it violates our statutes."

Question Presented

Whether the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution requires the State of New York to enforce in its courts a judgment of the courts of the State of Vermont in an action for alienation of affections and criminal conversation, despite the fact that the State of New York has abolished all remedies heretofore existing for the enforcement of actions based upon alleged alienation of affections and criminal conversation, and that the Vermont judgment strongly contravenes the public policy of the State of New York.

Statute Involved

The statutory provisions involved are Sections 61-a to 61-i of the Civil Practice Act of the State of New York. They are printed in Appendix A, infra, pp. 17-19.

Reasons for Granting the Writ.

1. The conclusion of the Court of Appeals that the Legislature did not intend to abolish actions on foreign judgments for alienation of affections by its enactment is without any fair or substantial support, essentially arbitrary, and so clearly ill-founded that it cannot sustain the judgment. Ward v. Love County, 253 U. S. 17, 22-23; Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Newport, 247 U. S. 464, 475-6; Enterprise Irrigation District v. Farmers Mutual Canal Company, 243 U. S. 157; Lawrence v. State Tax Commission, 286 U. S. 276, 282-3; Leathe v. Thomas, 207 U. S. 93, 99; Vandalia R.R. Co. v. South Bend, 207 U. S. 359, 367.

The statute had its origins in legislation introduced in the Indiana Legislature by Assemblywoman Roberta Nicholson, and enacted by the Indiana Legislature a short time before. (Chapter 208 of the Laws of Indiana, 1935, printed in Appendix A, pp. 20-24.) The nationwide publicity attendant upon the introduction and passage of the Indiana statute resulted in the enactment of similar laws by more than sixteen states in the same legislative year. See, Kane, Heartbalm and Public Policy, 5 Fordham Law Review 63 (1936); Penal Provisions of the New Heartbalm Legislation, 10 St. John's Law Review 236 (1936); Legislative Abolitions of Certain Actions Designed to Protect the Family Relation, 30 Illinois Law Review 764 (1936); Feinsinger, Legislative Attack on Heartbalm, 33 Michigan Law Review 979 (1935); 10 Wisconsin Law Review 417; Conflicts, Abolition of Actions for Breach of Promise, Alienation of Affections, Seduction and Criminal Conversation, 13 N.Y.U.L.Q. 104 (1935); Avoidance of the Incidence of the Anti-Heart Balm Statutes, 52 Columbia Law Review 242 (1952).

The New York statute, introduced by Senator John J. McNaboe, incorporated many sections of the Indiana legislation, but added other provisions. No legislative hearings were held upon it, and no reports were issued by legislative committees. It was passed by the Assembly unanimously, and without debate. The discussion in the Senate, where it also was passed without change, has not been published and is not available.

The best index as to the intention of the Legislature lies in an examination of the additions engrafted in New York upon the Indiana law.

Thus, the New York statute was entitled "An Act to amend the Civil Practice Act, in relation to declaring and carrying into effect the public policy of the State with respect to causes of action for alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction and breach of contract to marry, actions thereon, contracts with respect thereto and acts and proceedings in connection therewith."

Section 61-a of the New York statute contains a most emphatic and sweeping declaration of public policy, entirely absent from the Indiana statute. It is significant that Section 61-a does not limit the scope of the Act to actions grounded on alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction and breach of contract to marry, as the Court of Appeals has concluded. To the contrary, Section 61-a specifically reaches out and encompasses "the remedies heretofore provided by law for the enforcement of actions based upon alleged alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction and breach of contract to marry", and specifically abolishes all such remedies. The section reads as follows:

> Section 61-a. Declaration of public policy of state. The remedies heretofore provided by law for the enforcement of actions based upon alleged alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction and breach of contract to marry, having been subjected to grave abuses, causing extreme annoyance, embarrassment, humiliation and pecuniary damage to many persons wholly innocent and free of any wrongdoing, who were merely the victims of circumstances, and such remedies having been exercised by unscrupulous persons for their unjust enrichment, and such remedies having furnished vehicles for the commission or attempted commission of crime and in many cases > having resulted in the perpetration of frauds, it is hereby declared as the public policy of the state that the best interest of the people of the state will be served by the abolition of such remedies. Consequently, in the public interest, the necessity for the enactment of this article is hereby declared as a matter of legislative determination.

And Section 61-h provides that "This article shall be liberally construed to effectuate the objects and purposes thereof and the public policy of the state as hereby declared." And Section 61-i declares that all inconsistent and prior acts and parts of acts are superseded.

In the light of the words of the statute specifically abolishing all "remedies heretofore provided by law for the enforcement of actions based upon alleged alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction and breach of contract to marry", the conclusion of the Court of Appeals that the statute merely abolished the four causes of action themselves is unsubstantial and illusory, arbitrary, and without fair or substantial support and hence the petitioner may invoke the jurisdiction of this Court to determine the constitutional question. Indeed, as the dissenting judges below said, "to hold that the statute does not apply to an action for the enforcement of a foreign judgment is to read it contrary to its express purpose." The majority of the court below indicate in their opinion that their construction of the statute is based upon the mistaken belief that any other interpretation would incur the risk of unconstitutionality under the full faith and credit clause, thus demonstrating the specious and arbitrary nature of the reading they give the statute.

2. The question presented is of importance in the administration of family law, and is one of first impression. Short of a decision by this Court, the question must remain in dispute and unsettled and already overcrowded dockets of the Courts of the many states which by similar legislation have considered that they have rid their Courts of Heartbalm Litigation may be further burdened by a large scale revival of these actions.

As Professor James D. Sumner, Jr., of the Law School of the University of California has said in Full Faith and Credit for Judicial Proceedings, 2 U.C.L.A. Law Review 441, 471, 494,

> "May a state refuse to enforce a judicial act of a sister state if the original cause of action upon which the decree was entered could not have been sued on in the second state? Specifically, is the public policy of the forum a valid plea? * * * Whether the (Supreme) Court will allow a second state to examine the original cause of action under any circumstances in the future cannot be definitely answered."

3. The decision of the Court of Appeals on the constitutional question is believed to be erroneous, and the dissenting opinions of Judge Van Voorhis and Judge Froessel to be correct.

In its decision below, the Court of Appeals has said that the Supreme Court of the United States has from the beginning consistently seen to it that a judgment of a state court should have the same credit, validity and effect in every other court in the United States which it had in the state where it was pronounced. In this mistaken view of the decisions of this Court, the court below relied, among other authorities, on Hampton v. M'Connell, 3 Wh. 234; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. 290; and Milwaukee County v. White, 296 U. S. 268.

Yet only twenty years after the decision in Hampton v. M'Connell, supra, this Court, in M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, 13 Pet. 312, rendered a decision which the late Mr. Justice Jackson has described as being hard to reconcile with the spirit of the opinion written in Hampton v. M'Connell. See Jackson, Full Faith and Credit, 45 Columbia L. Rev. 1, 7. In M'Elmoyle v. Cohen, supra, the Court said, at page 328,

> "* * * there is no direct constitutional inhibition upon the states, nor any clause in the Constitution by which it can even be plausibly inferred, that the states may not legislate upon the remedy in suits upon the judgments of other states, exclusive of an interference with their merits."

This is precisely what New York has by statute done here. It has provided that the remedies previously available for the enforcement of actions based upon alleged alienation of affections and criminal conversation are no longer available. Obviously, such remedies included an action on a Vermont judgment for alienation of affections and criminal conversation. In closing its courts to and withholding its remedies from all such claimants—whether they were New York citizens or citizens of other states—the legislature was well fortified by the decision of this Court in Anglo-American Provision Co. v. Davis, 191 U. S. 373, in which Mr. Justice Holmes said:

> "The Constitution does not require the State of New York to give jurisdiction to the Supreme Court against its will. If the plaintiff can find a court into which it has a right to come, then the effect of the judgment is fixed by the Constitution and the act in pursuance of it which Congress has passed. But the Constitution does not require the State to provide such a court. See Missouri v. Lewis, 101 U. S. 22, 30. If the State does provide a court to which its own citizens may resort in a certain class of cases, it may be that citizens of other States of the Union would also have a right to resort to it in cases of the same class."

In that case, it was held that New York was not required to enforce an Illinois judgment which ran counter to the public policy of New York.

Christmas v. Russell, supra, was reversed some years later by Wisconsin v. Pelican Insurance Co., 127 U. S. 265. And in Milwaukee County v. White, supra, this Court specifically took pains to emphasize that the holding there was limited to the single question of whether a judgment is to be denied full faith and credit merely because it is for taxes, saying:

> "Without attempting to say what their limits may be, we assume for present purposes that the command of the Constitution and of the statute is not all-embracing and direct our inquiry to the question whether a state to which a judgment for taxes is taken may have a policy against its enforcement meriting recognition as a permissible limitation upon the full faith and credit clause. * * * Of that question this Court is the final arbiter. * * * We conclude that a judgment is not to be denied full faith and credit in state and federal courts merely because it is for taxes."

There are inconsistencies and conflicts in the decisions of this Court as to the extent of the application of the full faith and credit clause. Nevertheless, certain decisions remain constant and survive the shifts of opinion and decision, and they strongly support our belief that the decision below is mistaken. Thus, Mr. Chief Justice Stone, speaking for an unanimous Court in Pink v. A. A. A. Highway Express, 314 U. S. 201, 210, said:

> "The full faith and credit clause is not an inexorable and unqualified command. It leaves some scope for state control within its borders of affairs which are peculiarly its own. The Court has often recognized > that consistently with the appropriate application of the full faith and credit clause there are limits to the extent to which the laws and policy of one state may be subordinated to those of another. Alaska Packers Assn. v. Commission, 294 U. S. 532; Pacific Ins. Co. v. Commission, 306 U. S. 493; Klaxon Co. v. Stentor Co., 313 U. S. 487, 497-8; see Milwaukee County v. White, 296 U. S. 268, 273."

In Alaska Packers Assn. v. Commissioner, 294 U. S. 532, 546, Mr. Justice Stone said: "It has often been recognized by this Court that there are some limitations upon the extent to which a state will be required by the full faith and credit clause to enforce even the judgment of another state in contravention of its own statutes or policy." In Bradford Electric Co. v. Clapper, 286 U. S. 145, it was said that the full faith and credit clause would not be applied where its enforcement would be obnoxious to the public policy of the forum. In Griffin v. McCoach, 313 U. S. 498, 507, it was said that a state is not required to enforce a law obnoxious to its public policy. In May v. Anderson, 345 U. S. 528, Mr. Justice Frankfurter said that "Interests of a State other than its duty to children may also prevail over the interest of national unity that underlies the full faith and credit clause." And, in his dissenting opinion in Vanderbilt v. Vanderbilt, U. S. , Mr. Justice Frankfurter also noted:

> "It is true that the commands of the full faith and credit clause are not inexorable in the sense that exceptional circumstances may relieve a state from giving full faith and credit to the judgment of a sister state obnoxious to an overriding policy of its own."

See also, the dissenting opinion of Mr. Justice Stone and Mr. Justice Cardozo in Yarborough v. Yarborough, 290 U. S. 202, 213.

Exceptional circumstances exist here which should relieve New York from enforcing this Vermont judgment. The public policy of New York could not be more strongly expressed than it is in the statutory declaration of public policy, and in the sections of the statute which make it a criminal offense for litigants and their attorneys to present actions based upon such claims in the New York courts. The Vermont judgment, and the cause of action upon which it is based, are plainly obnoxious to the overriding public policy of New York. The societal interests of New York require that her courts give no assistance to a claim, even though reduced to judgment, which offends and violates the expressed public policy of New York.

An appraisal of the respective interests of New York and Vermont (where there has been no legislative declaration of public policy) must find the weight of the balance favoring the New York statute and public policy.

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, this petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted.

APPENDIX A.

Article IIA, New York Civil Practice Act

"Sec. 61-a. Declaration of public policy of state. The remedies heretofore provided by law for the enforcement of actions based upon alleged alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction and breach of contract to marry having been subjected to grave abuses, causing extreme annoyance, embarrassment, humiliation and pecuniary damage to many persons wholly innocent and free of any wrongdoing, who were merely the victims of circumstances, and such remedies having been exercised by unscrupulous persons for their unjust enrichment, and such remedies having furnished vehicles for the commission or attempted commission of crime and in many cases having resulted in the perpetration of frauds, it is hereby declared as the public policy of the state that the best interests of the people of the state will be served by the abolition of such remedies. Consequently, in the public interest, the necessity for the enactment of this article is hereby declared as a matter of legislative determination."

"Sec. 61-b. Certain causes of action hereafter accruing abolished. The rights of action heretofore existing to recover sums of money as damage for the alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction, or breach of contract to marry are hereby abolished."

"Sec. 61-d. Legal effect of certain acts hereafter occurring. No act hereafter done within this state shall operate to give rise, either within or without this state, to any of the rights of action abolished by this article. No contract to marry, hereafter made or entered into in this state shall operate to give rise, either within or without this state, to any cause or right of action for the breach thereof."

"Sec. 61-e. Certain acts and proceedings with respect to causes of action abolished or barred by this article prohibited. It shall hereafter be unlawful for any person, either as a party or attorney, or an agent or other person in behalf of either, to file or serve, cause to be filed or served or threaten to file or serve or to threaten to cause to be filed or served, any process or pleading, in any court of the state, setting forth or seeking to recover a sum of money upon any cause of action abolished or barred by this article, whether such cause of action arose within or without the state."

"Sec. 61-f. Certain contracts void as against public policy. All contracts and instruments of every kind, name, nature or description, which may hereafter be executed within this state in payment, satisfaction, settlement or compromise of any claim or cause of action abolished or barred by this article, whether such claim or cause of action arose within or without this state, are hereby declared to be contrary to the public policy of this state and absolutely void. It shall be unlawful to cause, induce or procure any person to execute such a contract or instrument; or cause, induce or procure any person to give, pay, transfer or deliver any money or thing of value in payment, satisfaction, settlement or compromise of any such claim or cause of action; or to receive, take or accept any such money or thing of value as such payment, satisfaction, settlement or compromise. It shall be unlawful to commence or cause to be commenced, either as party or attorney, or as agent or otherwise in behalf of either, in any court of this state, any proceeding or action seeking to enforce or recover upon any such contract or instrument, knowing it to be such, whether the same shall have been executed within or without this state."

"Sec. 61-g. Penalties for violation. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this article shall be guilty of a felony which shall be punishable by a fine of not less than one thousand dollars nor more than five thousand dollars, or by imprisonment for a term of not less than one year nor more than five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court."

Appendix A.

"Sec. 61-h. Construction of Article. This article shall be liberally construed to effectuate the objects and purposes thereof and the public policy of the state as hereby declared. If any clause, sentence, paragraph or part of this article shall for any reason be adjudged by any court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, such judgment shall not affect, impair or invalidate the remainder thereof, but shall be confined in its operation to the clause, sentence, paragraph or part thereof, directly involved in the controversy in which such judgment shall have been rendered. If the application of this article, or any part thereof, to any person or circumstances shall be adjudged by such court to be invalid or ineffectual for any reason, such judgment shall not affect the application of such article or part to any other person or circumstances."

"Sec. 61-i. Inconsistent laws superseded. This article shall supersede all acts and parts of acts, inconsistent with this article, to the extent of such inconsistency, but in all other respects shall be deemed supplemental to such acts and parts of acts. Nothing contained in this article shall be construed as a repeal of any of the provisions of the penal law or the code of criminal procedure or of any other law of this state relating to criminal or quasi-criminal actions or proceedings."

Indiana, 1935 Regular Session

Chapter 208
House Bill #138
Approved March 13, 1935

An act to promote public morals, by abolishing civil causes of action for breach of promise to marry, alienation of affections, criminal conversation, and certain causes of action for seduction, prohibiting the bringing, prosecution or settlement or any such actions, establishing limitations thereon, regulating the procedure in such actions and in actions and proceedings for divorce, separate maintenance, annulment of marriage, and for custody or support of children, prescribing penalties for the violation of this act.

Section 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That all civil causes of action for breach of promise to marry, for alienation of affections, for criminal conversation, and for the seduction of any female person of the age of twenty-one years or more are hereby abolished, provided that this section shall not affect any such cause of action heretofore accrued.

Section 2. No act hereafter done within this state shall operate to give rise, either within or without this state, to any of the causes of action abolished by this act. No contract to marry which shall hereafter be made within this state shall operate to give rise, either within or without this state, to any cause of action for breach thereof. It is the intention of this section to fix the effect, status and character of such acts and contracts and to render them ineffective to support or give rise to any such causes of action within or without this state.

Appendix A.

SECTION 3. It shall hereafter be unlawful for any person, either as litigant or attorney, to file, cause to be filed, threaten to file, or threaten to cause to be filed, in any court in this state, any pleading or paper setting forth or seeking to recover upon any cause of action abolished or barred by this act, whether such cause of action arose within or without this state.

SECTION 4. It shall hereafter be unlawful for any person, either as litigant or attorney, to file, cause to be filed, threaten to file, or threaten to cause to be filed in any court of this state, any pleading or paper naming or describing in such manner as to identify any person as co-respondent or participant in misconduct of the adverse party in any action for divorce, separate maintenance, annulment of marriage, or custody or care of children, or in any citation or proceedings ancillary or subsequent to such an action. In all such cases it shall be sufficient for such pleader to designate any such co-respondent or third party in general language which is not sufficient for identification, and such general language shall operate with the same legal effect as complete naming and identification of the person would do: Provided, however, That the adverse party may file a motion to make such pleading or paper more specific by stating such name, identity or other facts. The granting of such motion, in whole or in part, shall rest in the sound discretion of the court, and, if ordered granted, the pleader shall amend said pleading or paper so as to set forth the information specifically required by said order, but no further.

SECTION 5. No attorney appearing in any of the proceedings mentioned in the last section on behalf of a party thereto asserting misconduct by the adverse party shall ask of any witness any question intended or calculated to disclose the name or identity of any third person charged as co-respondent or participant in any such misconduct, nor shall any party or witness testifying on behalf of a party asserting misconduct by the adverse party name or identify any third person charged as a co-respondent or participant in any such misconduct: Provided, That if the court in the exercise of a sound discretion shall so order, counsel for any party charged with any act of misconduct with a third person may be permitted to cross-examine a witness who has testified to any such act of misconduct concerning the identity of any such third person and, within such limits as the court may prescribe, such witness may make answer to questions so asked. In all testimony in such actions, proceedings and citations, designation of such co-respondent or other alleged participant in misconduct by general language not sufficient for identification shall operate with the same legal effect as complete identification. The discretion vested in the court by this section shall be exercised in such manner as to avoid injustice to litigants, while at the same time avoiding so far as possible the public revelation of the name or identity of such third person, and to this end the court may, in all such cases, impound pleadings or other documents in the case and hear such testimony in chambers. This section shall not be construed to change the grounds for divorce or impair the substantive rights or parties in any such cases, but to regulate pleading, practice and testimony therein so as to eliminate extortion and public scandal. The provisions of this section shall apply as well to the taking of testimony by deposition or commission as to proceedings before the court, and any wilful violation of any provision of this section by any attorney, party or witness shall constitute a direct contempt of the court having jurisdiction of the proceeding in which the same occurs, and may be punished by such court with such fine not exceeding five hundred dollars as such court may deem proper:

Provided, That if the adverse party shall intend to file a motion to make any pleading or paper more specific by stating the name, identity or other fact descriptive of any co-respondent or participant in misconduct of the adverse party in any action or proceeding to which reference is in this Act made, any party who may have given notice of the taking of a deposition shall be so notified of such intention in writing before the time fixed for taking such deposition, and such notice may be served upon either the party or his attorney.

SECTION 6. All civil causes of action for breach of promise to marry, alienation of affections, criminal conversation and for the seduction of any female person of the age of twenty-one years or more, which have heretofore accrued shall be commenced within sixty days after this act goes into effect and not thereafter and, if not so commenced, shall thereafter be completely barred, the provisions of any other law of this state to the contrary notwithstanding. All actions for breach of a now existing contract to marry shall be commenced within sixty days after any breach thereof and not thereafter and, if not so commenced, shall thereafter be completely barred, the provisions of any other law of this state to the contrary notwithstanding.

SECTION 7. All contracts and instruments of every kind which may hereafter be executed within this state in payment, satisfaction, settlement or compromise of any claim or cause of action abolished or barred by this act, whether such claim or cause of action arose within or without this state, are hereby declared to be contrary to the public policy of this state and absolutely void. It shall be unlawful to cause, induce or procure any person to execute such a contract or instrument; or cause, induce or procure any person to give, pay, transfer or deliver any money or thing of value in payment, satisfaction, settlement or compromise of any such claim or cause of action; or to receive, take or accept any such money or thing of value in such payment, satisfaction, settlement or compromise. It shall also be unlawful to commence or cause to be commenced, either as litigant or attorney, in any court of this state, any proceeding or action seeking to enforce or recover upon any such contract or instrument, knowing it to be such, whether the same shall have been executed within or without this state: Provided, however, That this section shall not apply to the payment, satisfaction, settlement or compromise of any causes of actions which are not abolished or barred by this act, or any contracts or instruments heretofore executed, or to the bona fide holder in due course of any negotiable instrument which may be executed hereafter.

SECTION 8. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of Sections 3, 4 or 7 of this act shall be guilty of a felony which shall be punishable by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than one thousand dollars, to which may be added imprisonment for any determinate period of not less than one year nor more than five years, in the discretion of the court.

SECTION 9. Each section and provision of this act shall be construed separately, and the invalidity of any section or provision thereof shall not affect the validity of the remaining sections or provisions. This act shall be liberally construed to effectuate the object thereof.

SECTION 10. All laws and parts of laws in conflict with any provision of this act are hereby repealed, to the extent of such conflict, but in all other respects this act shall be deemed supplemental to existing laws. Nothing in this act shall be construed to repeal any of the criminal laws of this state.

SUPREME COURT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK

COUNTY OF NEW YORK

SPECIAL TERM, PART I

McGIVERN, J.:

Motion to strike out the defense and for judgment on the pleadings is granted. Although the judgment of Vermont sued on here is based on a cause of action which is prohibited as against public policy in this state (see sec. 61, C.P.A.) and the defense raises that objection, nevertheless the judgment is entitled to full faith and credit in this state (see Williams v. North Carolina, 317 U. S. 287, at p. 294). New York cannot re-try the case, or review, as in appeal, the judgment of the Vermont Court.

Decision of Court of Appeals Dismissing Appeals.

COURT OF APPEALS,

STATE OF NEW YORK.

No. 117

LORRAINE WALCOTT J. PARKER,

Respondent,

v.

SYLVIA GOULD HOEFER,

Appellant.

Appeals dismissed upon the ground that no constitutional question is directly involved (Civil Practice Act, § 588, subd. 1, par. [a]). We pass upon no other question. No opinion. All concur except Van Voorhis, J., who dissents in an opinion in which Froessel, J., concurs.

DISSENTING OPINION.

VAN VOORHIS, J. (dissenting):

This is an action on a judgment obtained in another state for alienation of the affections of plaintiff's husband. Defendant appeals from a judgment on the pleadings. The answer, which has been stricken as insufficient in law, alleges that many of the acts alleged in the complaint in the other state are stated to have occurred in New York State. Sections 61-a to 61-i of our Civil Practice Act are cited, outlawing causes of action for alienation of affections as contrary to our public policy. In particular, section 61-d is relied upon stating that

> "No act hereafter done within this state shall operate to give rise, either within or without this state, to any of the rights of action abolished by this article."

The only situations in which this section could be applied would be similar to this case, where an attempt is made to enforce a judgment obtained in another state by reason of transactions of this nature occurring in this State. The order appealed from, in effect, hold this section of the Civil Practice Act to be unconstitutional as violating the full faith and credit clause of the Federal Constitution. The constitutionality of section 61-d of the New York State Civil Practice Act is, of course, presumed (Borden's Co. v. Baldwin, 293 U. S. 194). This is not the case of a judgment of another state altering or adjudicating a question of marital status (Thorp v. Thorp, 90 N. Y. 602; Fisher v. Fisher, 250 N. Y. 313). It is a personal judgment for the recovery of a sum of money by one individual against another, based mainly upon transactions occurring in New York State and rendered contrary to the established public policy of New York State. Under such circumstances, the full faith and credit clause is not an inexorable or unqualified command (Pink v. A.A.A. Highway Express, 314 U. S. 201). In my view, we are not required to give effect to this judgment of the Vermont court (Alaska Packers Association v. Commissioner, 294 U. S. 532, 546; Wisconsin v. Pelican Insurance Company, 127 U. S. 265; Mertz v. Mertz, 271 N. Y. 466; Honorable Robert H. Jackson, Cardozo Lecture, Columbia Law Rev. January, 1945, pp. 1-34).

The judgment appealed from should be reversed, with costs in all courts, and plaintiffs motion for summary judgment should be denied.

COURT OF APPEALS

STATE OF NEW YORK

No. 28.

LORRAINE WALCOTT J. PARKER,

Respondent,

vs.

SYLVIA GOULD HOEFER,

Appellant.

DYE, J.:

In this appeal by our permission, we consider whether New York must give full faith and credit to a foreign judgment, notwithstanding that the underlying claim would not be enforceable in the state.

The plaintiff, a resident of Vermont, has a final judgment against the defendant, a resident of New York, in an action for alienation of her husband's affections and for criminal conversation. When such judgment could not be collected in Vermont, she commenced this action to enforce it in New York. The defendant, by her answer, interposed a defense based upon all the provisions of Civil Practice Act, art. 2-A, relating to actions against the public policy of the State of New York which, among others, includes actions "based upon alleged alienation of affections and criminal conversation" (§ 61-a). When issue was joined, plaintiff moved, pursuant to Rules of Civil Practice, Rule 109, to strike the defense in the answer and for judgment pursuant to rule 112 of the Rules of Civil Practice.[1]

Article 2-A of the Civil Practice Act designates various causes of action which may not be enforced in New York (cf. § 61-a to f inclusive)[2] but nowhere does it abolish an action on a judgment rendered in a sister state by a court having jurisdiction of the person and the subject matter.

We do not read the statutory language as used in section 61-d or similar language in relation to enforcement or recovery upon contracts made in respect to claims buttressed in the abolished subject matter (§ 61-f) as including a foreign judgment. We note that when the statute refers to acts done, it speaks only of acts "done within the state". The Legislature could have easily said "acts done within or without this state", had it so intended. While it is true that the statute is to be liberally construed (§ 61-h), it does not mean that the court may read into the statute by implication something that is not mentioned. Statutes in derogation of common law may not be enlarged beyond the clear import of the language used (Leppard v. O'Brien, 225 App. Div. 162, affd. 252 N. Y. 563; Matter of Fischer, 261 App. Div. 252) and no presumption attaches "unless the language is clear and explicit in that direction" (People v. Phyfe, 136 N. Y.

[1] The case first came to our Court on a direct appeal from Special Term, which we dismissed (308 N. Y. 746). Appellant then went to the Appellate Division, First Department, and they affirmed (1 App. Div. 2d 659), from which affirmance an appeal was taken as of right on an alleged constitutional question which we dismissed (1 N. Y. 2d 873). The App. Div. thereafter denied leave to appeal to this Court and when the motion was renewed in this Court we granted (2 N. Y. 2d 707).

[2] The actions abolished are those grounded on "alienation of affections, criminal conversation, seduction and breach of contract to marry."

554, 558). There is no substance in the argument that the defendant, by her answer, placed herself within the reach of section 61-d and f. True, the answer says that "many of the acts alleged therein were alleged to have occurred in the State of New York". Such language is meaningless in face of the circumstance that the plaintiff has neither alleged nor defendant admitted that the Vermont judgment is based on transactions which occurred within New York State, nor is there anything in the record indicating that any of the acts actually took place in New York.

Had the legislature attempted to abolish actions for enforcement of judgments rendered by courts of competent jurisdiction in sister states, it would have incurred the risk of unconstitutionality (U. S. Const. Art. IV, § 1)[3]. The Supreme Court of the United States has from the beginning consistently seen to it that "A judgment of a state court should have the same credit, validity and effect in every other court in the United States which it had in the state where it was pronounced" (Hampton v. McConnell, 3 Wh. 234, 235), which principal is recognized in the Federal statutes (U. S. Rev. Stat., § 905; 28 U. S. Code, Tit. 28, § 1738) and has been reiterated in Fauntleroy v. Lum (210 U. S. 230, 237), Morris v. Jones (329 U. S. 545), and followed in numerous cases (cf. Sherrer v. Sherrer, 334 U. S. 343; Milwaukee County v. White Co., 296 U. S. 268).

Because there is a full faith and credit cause, defendant may not a second time challenge the validity of plaintiff's right which has ripened into a judgment (Magnolia Petroleum Co. v. Hunt, 320 U. S. 430), which is to say that a judgment of a court having jurisdiction of the

[3] "Art. IV. Section 1. Full Faith and Credit shall be given in each State to the public Acts, Records, and judicial Proceedings of every other State. And the Congress may by general Laws prescribe the Manner in which such Acts, Records and Proceedings shall be proved, and the Effect thereof."

parties and of the subject matter operates as res judicata in the absence of fraud or collusion, even if obtained upon default (Riehle v. Margolies, 279 U. S. 218, 225). "Such a judgment obtained in a sister state is, with exceptions not relevant here see Williams v. North Carolina, 317 U. S. 287, 294-295, entitled to full faith and credit in another state thereof, although the underlying claim would not be enforceable in the state of the forum" (Morris v. Jones, supra, p. 551; Christmas v. Russell, 5 Wall. [U. S.] 290; Fauntleroy v. Lum, supra; Roche v. McDonald, 275 U. S. 449; Titus v. Wallick, 306 U. S. 282).

It is argued that this is the sort of case where it can be said that the full faith and credit clause is not "inexorable or unqualified command" (citing Pink v. A.A.A. Highway Express (314 U. S. 201, 210). That case is not apt in this setting. There the New York Superintendent of Insurance, as statutory liquidator of an insolvent Mutual Insurance Company organized in New York, sought to recover assessments levied against policy holders resident in Georgia, allegedly due by reason of their mutual membership. The action was dismissed on demurrer and the Supreme Court affirmed on the ground that the full faith and credit clause could not be used to override the domestic law and policy of Georgia against the enforcement of obligations extrinsically imposed by New York Law, a situation quite different from the present situation. Here, the plaintiff is not attempting to enforce in the courts of New York an action for alienation of affections and criminal conversation, which have been abolished in New York but, rather, to enforce a judgment rendered in Vermont as between these parties, which was final and conclusive on the rights litigated. New York cannot retry the case or review as on appeal the Vermont judgment. The tort on which the Vermont action was based was fully merged in the judgment. The judgment became a debt which the defendant was under obligation to pay (Gutta Percha & Rubber Manufacturing Co. v. The Mayor, 108 N. Y. 276). The present suit, then, is upon an entirely different cause of action from that merged in the judgment (Titus v. Wallick, supra) and may not be called a suit on an action abolished in New York (cf. Fauntleroy v. Lum, supra; Hellstern v. Hellstern, 279 N. Y. 327; Williamsburgh Savings Bank v. Bernstein, 277 N. Y. 11). When so viewed, it does not contravene New York policy as enunciated in Article 2-a, Civil Practice Act. The answer raises no issues of fact requiring a trial, for the defenses relied on are insufficient as matter of law.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed with costs.

FROESSEL, J., dissenting:

In this action to enforce a Vermont judgment obtained by plaintiff, a resident of that state, against defendant, a resident of this State, for alienation of the affections of plaintiff's husband, plaintiff's motion to strike out a defense in the answer and for judgment on the pleadings was granted by Special Term, and the judgment entered thereon affirmed by the Appellate Division. The answer in this action stated that many of the acts in the Vermont action "were alleged to have occurred in the State of New York".

In 1935, section 61-b of the Civil Practice Act abolished actions for alienation of affections, and section 61-d, set forth in the answer in this action, provides, so far as pertinent:

> "No act hereafter done within this state shall operate to give rise, either within or without this state, to any of the rights of action abolished by this article * * *." (Emphasis supplied.)

As we read this section, and in the light of the legislative declaration of the public policy of this State in section 61-a of the Civil Practice Act, its provisions may bar enforcement of the judgment sued on if based on acts occurring within this State, and that can only be determined at a trial. Indeed, section 61-d could have no other meaning, for, as pointed out in Judge VAN VOORHIS' dissenting memorandum on the dismissal of a previous appeal in this case (1. N. Y. 2d 874), the "only situations in which this section could be applied would be similar to this case * * *". To hold that the statute does not apply to an action for the enforcement of a foreign judgment is to read it contrary to its express purpose.

As to the impact of the full faith and credit clause, we have already indicated in the dissenting memorandum hereinabove referred to that it is our opinion, in the light of the clear and strong expression of public policy hereinbefore referred to, that we are not required to enforce this judgment if it violates our statute.

The judgment of the Appellate Division and the judgment of Special Term should be reversed, and the motion denied, with costs.

Conway, Ch. J., Desmond, Fuld and Burke, JJ., concur with Dye, J., Froessel, J. dissents in an opinion in which Van Voorhis, J. concurs.
